

Curtis Elliott
San Antonio, Texas
1982 American Dream Classic Winner

How to survive sudden death.

There are few pressure-cookers in bowling anything like the American Dream Classic amateur tournament.

The top prize in this tournament in 1982: $130,000.

The format: head-to-head, single-elimination match play. Better known as "sudden death."

To win it, Curtis Elliott had to win eight tough matches over two days. Frame after frame of nerve-shattering, big-stakes pressure. One bad shot could have sent him home.

A good reason to use the "strike force." The AMF Angle. The first and winningest, urethane ball in the world. As Curtis said, "For me, it hits harder and carries better."

With its uncanny consistency on a wide variety of lane conditions, the Angle quickly gave Curtis a winning line in every game. Plus the confidence to throw his most powerful shot every time.

The Angle. Pro or amateur, it's what champions need when the pressure's on.

The best approach
